Donald McGill's postcards alive and well in Weymouth!

I was astonished, writes Brian Lund, to spot a rack of Donald McGill postcards at a shop on Weymouth's seafront recently. Published by 'Moocow Studios' (which specialises in digitally-produced gift products) in a 148 x 105mm format, there were 40-odd cards on the rack, all reproductions of the 'New McGill' series from the 1950s-70s. Cards cost 60p each but you can buy a pack of 48 of one design from Moocow's website for £7.20. The reverse states they are 'produced on licence' (from the Donald McGill Museum in Ryde?) but their appearance begs a number of questions.

Why do Moocow think these cards, featuring images that were deemed politically incorrect years ago, will appeal to today's holidaymakers?

Is it so difficult to find artists willing to do original designs that firms have to resort to reproducing stuff from the last century? (I also found some Quip repros in a gift shop in Paignton. Neither retailer was positive about the sales of these cards, but as one said "it's so difficult to get hold of postcards these days").

Isn't this just a bad image for picture postcards, re-inforcing stereotypical views about them?

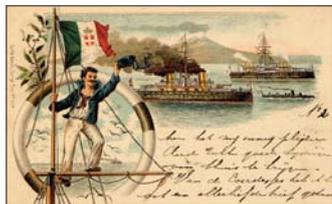

On the positive side, they might just introduce some people to the concept of picture postcards as collectables!

Postcards back at York Racecourse

Do you want the good news or the bad news?

Ok, good first. There will be a postcard fair at York Racecourse on 20-21 January 2023, run by Chris Rainey & Kate Puleston.

Bad news? It's part of the coin & stamp event the couple already run, and it's on the third floor. How are the mighty (picture postcards) fallen.....
