Picture Postcard Magic

Brian Lund with a long postcard injury list

If you ever went to A & E on a late Saturday afternoon in normal times, you 'll know that the place would be generally full of injured blokes who'd been playing rugby or football that day. Breaks, bleeds, dislocation and concussions were pretty regular, as postcard artist Cynicus portrayed with some of his humorous designs. I came to this feature, though, after spotting a pair of cards that showed an injured cat and a dog, and started looking for other cards I might have on the injury theme (that's a new one, surely – would anyone have ever put together a collection of this subject?!). I can offer a few here, but I'm sure there must be lots of others around, and I'll make sure I snap up others I come across. The selection here is a bit of fun, with the exception of the last illustration, which carries a serious social comment. Of course, when Doug Tempest drew this cartoon sketch, violence against women was an unspoken social problem, not spoken about publicly even if not condoned. It was just a fact of life. I've seen other cards making a similar comment in the past. This is a great example of postcards as social history.

Featured postcards:

1. A postcard in the 'Katz' series published by Inter-Art, posted at Manchester in May 1915.
2. Another card from the same publisher, this time featuring an injured dog.
3. 'Indisposed' is the caption on this card, a real photograph published by Aristophot. It was postally used in 1915.
4. You can rely on Cynicus (Martin Anderson) to come up with a comic design for every situation. I'm not sure about the bandaging of this injured rugby player, but you get the picture. Card posted at Peterborough in May 1911.
5. Another rugby casualty here on a postcard from Glasgow publishers Millar & Lang by anonymous artist, posted at Hadfield to an address in the same Derbyshire village.
6. Here's Cynicus again with another 'result of the match' scene. Alf Carter, of Malta Street, Birkenhead, received this cheery postcard on Christmas day 1909.
7. A rather tragic card from Bamforth's staff artist Doug Tempest, with undertones of domestic abuse. She might have been hoping Mike wouldn't come back – note the handshake rather than a kiss. This postcard was posted at Folkestone in September 1915.
